A Danville, Kentucky, resident visited JACK Casino in Cincinnati Wednesday morning claiming they asked him to leave for something he says he did not do.

Tyler, who asked not to share his last name, says he was asked to leave because of the stain security said he had on his pants.

When he went to use the bathroom, a casino spokesperson said three customers saw him throwing out his underwear and complained that he smelled.

"This occurred during the $1,000 free money giveaway in the poker room," he said. "I feel extremely embarrassed and hope that this is not done to any more casino patrons."

Tyler said he won $2,000 as part of the contest and feels he was thrown out because the casino did not want him to win any more money.

“JACK Cincinnati Casino’s top priority is to continuously provide a clean and sanitary environment to the three million guests that visit the property annually,” a statement from the casino read.

Tyler, who traveled nearly two hours to play Texas Hold 'em, is considering all his options.

"They have to have some type of humiliation themselves if they falsely accuse someone of pooping their pants that did not," he said.

Enquirer media partner Fox19 provided this report.
