Less than a month after capturing his first career victory in the NASCAR Cup Series, Tyler Reddick captured win No. 2 last week on the road course at Indianapolis Motor Speedway. Now the talented youngster will carry lots of momentum into the 2022 FireKeepers Casino 400 at Michigan International Speedway on Sunday. Reddick is up to 11th in the standings and has clinched his spot in the 2022 NASCAR Playoffs with his second win, but would love to continue his success on the two-mile d-shaped oval in Southeastern Michigan. The 2022 NASCAR at Michigan green flag drops at 3 p.m. ET on Sunday on NBC (stream now on FuboTV).

The latest 2022 FireKeepers Casino 400 odds from Caesars Sportsbook list Reddick at 10-1, while Kyle Busch is the 11-2 favorite. Hendrick Motorsports teammates Kyle Larson (6-1) and Chase Elliott (13-2) are also near the top of the NASCAR at Michigan odds board. Developed by daily Fantasy pro and SportsLine predictive data engineer Mike McClure, this proprietary NASCAR prediction model simulates every race 10,000 times, taking into account factors such as track history and recent results.

In the 2021 season, McClure nailed Martin Truex Jr. to win at Martinsville for a strong 3-1 payout. Then, it called Chase Elliott to win at Road America for a 5-2 payout. McClure's model also called Larson's win at Texas for an 11-4 payout and his win at Kansas for a 9-4 payout in back-to-back weeks before nailing Larson to win the season-finale in Phoenix to claim the 2021 NASCAR Cup Championship.

In total, it nailed five of Larson's wins during a historic season and has also gone 15-9 on its head-to-head matchup predictions in the 2022 season. Earlier this season, it was high on Ross Chastain to win in Austin, giving him a far better shot to win than his 40-1 odds implied. The model was also high on Joey Logano before he won as a 15-1 underdog at Darlington and high on him again when he returned 14-1 for his win in St. Louis. Anyone who followed its lead on those plays saw huge returns on their NASCAR picks.

Now, the model simulated the 2022 NASCAR at Michigan race 10,000 times. Head to SportsLine to see the complete projected 2022 FireKeepers Casino 400 leaderboard

Top 2022 NASCAR at Michigan predictions

One surprise: the model is high on Kevin Harvick, even though he's a 17-1 long shot in the latest 2022 NASCAR at Michigan odds. He's a target for anyone looking for a huge payday. The 46-year-old would be the last man out if the 2022 NASCAR Playoffs started today, and it's virtually impossible for him to close the 96-point gap to Martin Truex Jr. to get in on points if there are no other first-time winners this season.

That means it's win or bust with just four races remaining in the NASCAR regular season. And Michigan International Speedway is a track that Harvick should feel most comfortable on after winning five times throughout his career. That included three consecutive wins there in 2019 and 2020 and wins in four of the last six starts there overall. See which other NASCAR underdogs to pick here

And a massive shocker: Chase Elliott, one of the Vegas favorites at 13-2, stumbles big-time and barely cracks the top five. There are far better values in the 2022 FireKeepers Casino 400 starting lineup. The 26-year-old is already a NASCAR Cup Series champion (2020) and he sits atop the 2022 NASCAR standings by 125 points with four wins on the season.

However, he's coming off a disappointing 16th-place finish where he didn't lead a lap on the Indianapolis road course and he's never won in 11 career starts at Michigan International Speedway. In fact, after three straight runner-up finishes at Michigan to start his NASCAR Cup Series career, Elliott has finished seventh or worse in each of his last eight starts there.
